

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am deeply grateful to my CIIS committee members, Brendan Collins and Steve Goodman, both of whom have supported me throughout this process.

I am also very grateful to my Japanese committee member, Prof. Shoji Muramoto. He has been tireless in his willingness to read and critique my writing. He also has provided a host of practical things, such as helping me get a Japanese visa and arranging for my association with Hanazono University in Kyoto, Japan. I also appreciate CIIS as an institution. I don't think I could have done what I've done anywhere else.

I am very grateful to the six Zen masters who I interviewed for this study. This kind of project is very much a foreign activity to Japanese people. I greatly appreciate the willingness of these Zen masters, all of whom are in very traditional Japanese roles, to participate in a very non-traditional activity.

I am also very grateful for the people who helped me arrange the interviews. Without the introductions of these people the study would have been impossible. They were Jeff Shore, Kiyohiko Miyagawa, and Daigaku Rumme. I also wish to acknowledge the untiring help of Jeff Shore and Daigaku Rumme. They both were always willing to help me clarify any detail regarding the tradition of Zen Buddhism.

Lastly, I wish to acknowledge my gratitude to the three people who served as translators in the interviews, Jeff Shore, Daigaku Rumme, and Hiroko Shimamoto. Their willingness and excellence of translation was essential to this study.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Abstract .....	iv
Acknowledgements .....	vi
Chapter One: Introduction .....	1
The Relevance of Zen to Psychology--A Personal View .....	5
Zen Buddhism and this Study .....	9
Zen Buddhism and Psychology .....	13
Definition and Discussion of Terms.....	17
The Law of Cause and Effect ( inga 因果) .....	17
En (縁) .....	21
Engi (縁起) and Ka (果) .....	23
No-Self ( muga 無我) .....	25
Attachment ( shujaku 執着) .....	26
The Twelve-linked Chain of Dependent Origination .....	27
The Six States .....	31
The Four Noble Truths .....	32
Goals of this Study .....	35
Significance of this Work .....	36
Chapter Two: Literature Review .....	39
Contribution of this Dissertation.....	65
Chapter Three: Methodology .....	66
Basic Approach .....	66

Zen Methodology .....	67
Phenomenology and Zen .....	69
Hermeneutics .....	72
Methodological Cautions .....	73
Role of the Researcher .....	75
Interview Procedures .....	76
Interview Participants .....	81
Data Analysis .....	85
Validity .....	89
Delimitations .....	90
Limitations .....	91
Chapter Four: Causality.....	93
Experiences of Causality .....	94
Mind and Causality .....	103
Self and Causality.....	109
Interconnectedness .....	115
Living Causality .....	118
Spatial Self .....	138
Chapter Five: Attachment .....	146
Experiences of Attachment .....	147
Natural Attachment and Ego Attachment .....	148
The Root of Mind .....	158
Descriptions of Ego Attachment .....	164

Attachment and Other Functions of Mind .....	167
Detachment vs. Non-Attachment .....	180
Healing Ego Attachment .....	186
Chapter Six: No-Self .....	193
Experiences of No-Self .....	195
Limitations of the Intellectual Mind .....	197
The Stream of Consciousness .....	204
Realization of No-Self .....	206
Living No-Self .....	223
The Ego-Self .....	231
Healing the Ego-Self .....	237
Chapter Seven: Psychological Discussion .....	245
Causality .....	245
Mu 無--Being and Non-Being .....	246
The Spatial Self .....	249
Pure Experience .....	259
Awakening to the Inherent Self .....	267
Sudden and Gradual Awakening .....	277
Attachment as a Psychological Function .....	280
Attachment and the Ego-Self .....	289
No-Self--the Healthy Self .....	294
The Ego, the False Self, and the True Self .....	298
The Functioning of No-Self .....	310

The Death of the Ego-Self .....	313
Healing .....	321
Chapter Eight: Conclusions .....	325
Causality .....	326
Attachment .....	340
No-Self .....	349
Limitations of the Psychology of Zen .....	362
Application to Clinical Work.....	364
Suggestions for Further Research .....	373
Endnotes .....	379
References ..	389
Glossary .....	404